

Siamak Paulson

Candidate Nomination for IGS Council

Siamak Paulson is a Principal Geotechnical Engineer with over 20 years professional experience in civil and geotechnical engineering research and practice in the fields of waste management, mine tailings, water management, urban development and transport infrastructure in the Middle East, Asia and Australia.

Siamak has served on the Australasian Chapter of the International Geosynthetics Society (ACigs) since 2019 and is currently the President of ACigs. He has presented in several national and international conferences and is currently the Chairman of the 1st Geosynthetics Conference in Australia and New Zealand (GEOANZ#1).

Siamak is a Chartered Professional Engineer and has managed multidisciplinary design and construction quality assurance projects on a variety of civil engineering fields including Landfill and waste management projects design and construction supervision, surveillance and inspections; Tailings storage facility planning, design, construction supervision, technical specification, operation management, embankment lifting, closure and rehabilitation; Water storage earth dams and associated structures design, analysis, documentation and dam safety reviews and certifications; Road and transport infrastructure and Urban development ground investigations and slope stability.

Siamak's technical leadership and project management skills extends to planning, design, schedule, conduct and coordinate civil/geotechnical works from concept design through to construction.